ISINGLASS, n. f. [from ice, or is, and glass; that is, matter congealed into glass; ichthyocolla, Latin.]
Isinglass is a tough, firm, and light substance, of a whitish colour, and in some degree transparent, much resembling glue, but cleaner and sweeter. We usually receive it in twisted pieces, of a roundish figure like a staple, which the druggists divide into thin threads like skins, that easily dissolve. The fish from which isinglass is prepared is one of the cartilaginous kind, and a species of sturgeon: it grows to eighteen and twenty feet in length, and in its general figure greatly resembles the sturgeon. It is frequent in the Danube, the Boiethene, the Volga, and many other of the larger rivers of Europe. From the intestines of this fish the isinglass is prepared by boiling. The greatest quantity of isinglass is made in Russia. It is an excellent agglutinant and strengthener, and often prescribed in gellies and broths. The wine-coopers find it efficacious for clearing wines. Hill's Mat. Med.
 The cure of putrefaction requires an incrustating diet, as all viscid broths, hartshorn, ivory, and isinglass. Floer.
 Some make it clear by reiterated fermentations, and others by additions, as isinglass. Mortimer's Husbandry.

ISS

ISINGLASS Stone, n. f. This is a fossil which is one of the purest and simplest of the natural bodies. It is found in broad masses, composed of a multitude of extremely thin plates or flakes. The masses are of a brownish or reddish colour; but when the plates are separated, they are perfectly colourless, and more bright and pellucid than the finest glass. It is found in Mulcovy, Persia, the island of Cyprus, in the Alps and Apennines, and the mountains of Germany. The ancients made their windows of it, instead of glass. It is also sometimes used for glass before pictures, and for horn in lanterns. Hill's Mat. Med.
ISLAND, n. f. [insula, Latin; isola, Italian; ealand, Erse. It is pronounced iland.] A tract of land surrounded by water. He will carry this island home in his pocket, and give it his son for an apple. — And sowing the kernels of it in the sea, bring forth more islands. Shakespeare's Tempest.
 Within a long recess there lies a bay, an island shades it from the rolling sea, and forms a port. Dryden.
 Some safer world in depth of woods embrac'd, some happier island in the wat'ry waste. Johnson.
Island of bliss! amid the subject seas. Thomson.
ISLANDER, n. f. [from island. Pronounce iland.] An inhabitant of a country surrounded by water.
 We, as all islanders, are lunares, or the moon's men. Camd.
 Your dinner, and the generous islanders by you invited, do attend your presence. Shakespeare, Othello.
 There are many bitter sayings against islanders in general, representing them as fierce, treacherous, and inhospitable: those who live on the continent have such frequent intercourse with men of different religions and languages, that they become more kind than those who are the inhabitants of an island. Addison's Freeholder.
 A race of rugged mariners are these, unpolish'd men, and boisterous as their seas; the native islanders alone their care, and hateful he that breathes a foreign air. Pope's Odyssey.
ISLE, n. f. [isle, French; insula, Latin. Pronounce ile.]
 1. An island; a country surrounded by water.
